

From MONDAY June 18th, to MONDAY June 25th, 1750.

A LETTER from a Gentleman at Barbados, to his Friend in London, dated March 15th, 1749 so.

SIR,

His majesty's sloop Jamaica, Capt. Galbreith commander, being about to sail for London, with dispatches from his excellency Mr. Greenville our Governor and Commodore Holbourne, I could not avoid writing you a short state of the negotiation on which this vessel was sent out express, tho' you will have it with more certainty from the public letters.

You may doubtless have heard, that this express brought a packet from his grace the duke of Bedford to our governor, with duplicates of his majesty and the French king's orders for the evacuation of St. Lucia, Dominique, St. Vincent and Tobago: Mr. Greenville, upon receipt of the packet, with the advice of his majesty's council here, and in concert with the commodore, pitched on that gentleman as the most proper person to carry the orders into execution; and accordingly Mr. Holbourne, with his majesty's ships Tariffstock and Rose, and the Jamaica sloop, under his command, went to Martinique, to concert with monsieur Caylus, general of the French islands, the proper measures for the evacuation of those neutral islands. The commodore had not well dropp'd anchor, when he had a haughty message from Caylus, by a common foldier, complaining of an insult, which he said the French flag, in a French frigate, had received from the English fort at Nevis, as well as detaining one of the officers belonging to that frigate; and acquainting Mr. Holbourne, that he had wrote to general Mathew on the subject, demanding satisfaction for that insult, and waited for an answer, which, if not satisfactory, he was determin'd to make reprisals: Soon after this message was delivered, Monsieur, without waiting for any from the commodore, sent a footman on board the Tariffstock, to let Mr. Holbourne know, that he Caylus was going into the country, and if the commodore had any business with him, his secretary would be at hand to receive his message: Mr. Holbourne however, not minding these messages, sent Capt. Bladwell of the Rose, ashore in form, to attend Caylus, and to signify to him the royal orders, and the purport of the embassy, (as the French term it) Capt. Bladwell was received by Monsieur's secretary, but no one else was suffered to land; Caylus absconded and conceal'd himself in the town of Fort-Royal, and Capt. Bladwell having deliver'd his packets to the secretary, was attended to his boat, and told, upon his going off, that he nor no one else must come ashore again, for that Caylus would send off his answer to the commodore, which Monsieur did next day, by a Spanish serjeant, the purport whereof was, "that he, Caylus had received no such orders from the most Christian king, his master, and that therefore he would take no notice of what had been communicated to him by Mr. Greenville and Mr. Holbourne," and ordered for the future, they would forbear coming near the islands under his command."—Mr. Holbourne in his letter to Caylus, had demanded satisfaction for an insult, which the British flag, in his majesty's ship Success, under the command of Lord Colvill had, about six weeks ago, received from a battery of two guns, which were both fired at the Success, when going into Pidgion Island bay at St. Lucia; to this, Monsieur was pleas'd to answer, that he would enquire into the matter, and if his officer was in fault, he would give satisfaction; but still complain'd of the Nevis affair, which properly lay before General Mathew, and which is reported to stand thus.

Monsieur Caylus, being inform'd of the affair of Lord Colvill at St. Lucia, and expecting satisfaction would be demanded for that insult, as we are inform'd, sent the French frigate to Nevis, to be in the way of being fired at, so as that Caylus might have cause to recriminate when satisfaction should be demanded for the insult on the British flag; and accordingly, the French frigate coming to Nevis, and not complying with the requisites of the treaty of peace, good correspondence and neutrality in America, concluded between King James the 2d and Lewis the 14th in the year 1686, a gun was fired from the fort at the frigate, and an officer being sent ashore to demand the cause of firing, he was there outrageous, and was detain'd to answer for his insolence when General Mathew's orders should be received on that head.

I must further tell you, that Mr. Holbourne, upon his returning to Barbados from Martinique, finding the Jamaica sloop outfail'd the Tariffstock, which was foul, left that ship under the command of Capt. Drummond, and return'd here in this sloop, in order to communicate the success of his embassy to Governor Greenville, and to get her dispatch'd home; and the Tariffstock being obliged to put into St. Lucia by contrary winds, the French commandant there, ordered, that no one from the Man of War should be suffered to land, or to wood or water there, whereupon the Tariffstock made the best of her way to Barbados, where she now rides safe from French insults, which would not have escaped resentment, had not the British officers conceived they were restrained by treaties.

You now see,—how a petty French governor, not only insults the British flag, but treats with contempt the royal orders of two great monarchs, which surely he would not have dared to do, had not he had orders for that purpose: Is this then the French sincerity you apprehended they were full of at this juncture? No; you well know, Julius Caesar called them the perfidious Gauls, and we have no reason to withdraw from them that appellation, nor can I avoid saying here, of the French and English, as Polybius said of the Greeks and Romans.—"If you lend," says that judicious author, "a Greek one talent, with ten promises, ten sureties and as many witnesses, he will never stand to his agreement; whereas the Romans, whether it is that they account for the public money or that of private persons, are punctual and honest, because they have a regard to their word and honour."

But probably, the commissaries may, by this time, have settled the claim to those islands, and given St. Lucia and Dominique to the French, and St. Vincent and Tobago to Great Britain; which will be another stroke of triumph in French politicks; the first two being exceeding fine islands, full of commodious harbours, bays and rivers, and not a harbour of any consequence in the other two; besides, St. Vincent has all along been inhabited by Indians, and have a king there, who commands that island, and who, the other day, when at Martinique, treated Monsieur Caylus very cavalierly, and with much contempt, asserting his right to the dominions of that island, and his amity with the English, who had always he said, treated him and his subjects with great friendship. But however perfidious the French may be, the British subjects in the West-Indies, ought to make their grateful acknowledgements to his most gracious majesty, for the paternal care he takes of these his islands in the West Indies, nor ought they to be unthankful to his grace of Bedford, for the truly noble and sincere spirit he has shewn on this occasion; that noble duke we find inherits the virtues of his ancestors, who have ever been true patriots to their country; and British subjects have good reason to sing, Te Deum, that there is a True Briton, of so much disinterested merit at the helm of affairs. That heaven may assist and prosper his most sacred majesty, and his ministers, as well here as those of more consequence at home, in his and their honest endeavours, to bring that haughty, insolent and perfidious nation to a true sense of themselves, for the peace and quiet, not only of Europe, but of the world in general, is the hearty prayer of

Yours, &c.

Runaway twelve-months ago, from Mr. Paul Pillepontoux of Christ-Church parish, Kate, a middle sized, well-set negro wench, about 24 years of age, this country born, and formerly belonged to Mrs. l'Esquof of Charles-Town; she is a little yellowish in her face, and has lost two of her upper fore-teeth. She took along with her, her son a boy about 7 or 8 years old, named Billy. She has been frequently seen in and about Charles-Town, where she has gone about washing by the name of Delie, and is suspected to be encouraged and concealed by some white people, who have received wages of her, and others who have a desire to purchase her. But whereas the said two negroes are now, and have been for some time, the sole property of the subscriber, I do therefore forewarn all persons whatsoever, from either harbouring, concealing, hiring, or any wise entertaining the said wench and boy, on any pretence whatsoever; for such persons as are, or can be proved guilty of such villainous practices, may assure themselves of being prosecuted to the utmost rigour of the law. I also promise a reward of Ten Pounds, besides lawful charges, to any person groes, and either deliver them to me at the Free School in St. Tho-
